

Faculty are an integral part of the medical school. The appellation “doctor” – from the Latin docere, meaning “to teach” – includes the responsibility of all physicians to share knowledge and information with colleagues, trainees, and patients. Physicians have the opportunity to give back to their profession by teaching the science, art and ethics of medicine to medical students, residents and fellows. The medical school provides the opportunity for Clinical and Community Faculty to participate in training the next generation of physicians for tomorrow’s patients, and ultimately, improving the health of the communities we serve.

WMU Homer Stryker M.D. School of Medicine faculty have a primary appointment in a department of the medical school whether or not they are directly employed by the medical school. Clinical faculty are physicians and other healthcare providers who participate in teaching, clinical research, and administration of medical school programs. Community faculty are non-clinicians who also participate in the lecturing, research and administration of medical school programs.

There are three principles on which the faculty appointment is based: teaching activities, sustained efforts to improve personal teaching abilities, and service to the medical school. Clinical and Community Faculty participate directly in teaching or service to the medical school for a minimum of 50 hours in each year of the appointment period to continue to qualify for faculty appointment.

Teaching Activities:

- Teaching opportunities for Clinical and Community Faculty include:
 - Teaching in a classroom or small group setting.
 - Participation in student learning activities in the Simulation Center.
 - Serving as a mentor or clinical instructor for medical students in a clinical setting during first- and second-year longitudinal clinical experiences, third-year clerkships, and fourth-year electives.
 - Serving as a mentor or clinical instructor for residents and fellows in a clinical setting that includes medical students.

Sustained Efforts to Improve Teaching Abilities:

- Faculty members engage in efforts to improve personal teaching abilities and assessment skills in each year in the appointment interval. Documentation could include attendance in relevant teaching development activities sponsored by the medical school, local or national organizations, and professional societies that focus on or have relevant sessions directed to educational skills.

Service to the Medical School:

- Contributions and service other than teaching are important to the medical school as an academic institution and may include but are not limited to:
 - Research productivity and scholarly activity.
 - Leadership and service to the medical school and affiliated institutions in roles that are germane to full functioning of the medical school as a medical education institution.
 - A significant role in the curriculum of the medical school (e.g., course director, clerkship director, discipline director).
 - Service on medical school committees such as the Admissions Committee.
